

DG Interpretation (SCIC) is delighted to inform you that the Knowledge Centre on Interpretation is now available on-line for all to use

<https://ec.europa.eu/scic-kci>

It is of course also fully compatible with all browsers and with tablet and mobile interfaces.

Please go there today and sign-up! Scroll down to the features section to see how to sign up – or simply use your EU Login if you already have one, or ask for one by clicking on Create an EU Login at the top right hand corner of the page. Once logged in, be sure to update your profile (under the section on Networking), and make sure it is visible by checking the ‘visibility’ box.

So to recap, the KCI is a "single, go-to space to manage and exchange knowledge, create synergies and disseminate best practices on conference interpretation and more", designed to connect diverse communities with interests in interpretation.

The KCI provides a dynamic, collaborative space for interested parties to connect and share information related to interpretation. It is open to both internal and external audiences. Users can participate in communities and forums to discuss and share information, co-author WikiDocs, share news and events, publish content (via the in-house editorial team) and connect with one another via the networking lists.

Equally importantly, the KCI is a one-stop hub for information about not only conference interpretation, but also other forms of interpretation, such as public service and legal. Making use of the search function on the platform, users can find a wealth of material, including training tools, professional support, terminology resources, research and background reading, such as e-books, articles, dictionaries and other external, online information.

Currently, the KCI is only available in English. Over time, it will become available in all 24 of the EU's official languages, allowing users to search and upload content in whichever language they choose.

*Given that is such a collaborative platform it will only be as good as its users. We are counting on you to participate actively in the KCI and to spread the word. Please let your students, trainers, colleagues, researchers, friends and family know about this wonderful new tool.

Below you can find a link to our dedicated newsletter, which explains how to get started on the KCI and features articles by Elisabet Tiselius and Alexander Drechsel on how they intend to use the platform <https://europa.eu/!RP74Jn>

Please join us, and make the KCI a success for all!
